Living Life's Choices as Catholics

Advances in medicine provide opportunities to live longer. But not always. How do we as Catholics weigh our options when we face inevitable decisions around life's most difficult circumstances? Are we morally and ethically obliged to prolong life at any cost? How do we confront a terminal diagnosis or the prospect of an impaired future? How can we talk about life's choices in the most respectful and responsible way, and still be faithful to the teachings of the Church and our confidence in a loving and forgiving God?

Join us and our distinguished panel as we discuss these and other questions confronting all of us.
